SUFFRAGETTES 'TAKE ANOTHER STEP TOWARDS VOTING'

Rumours have been heard that Christabel Pankhurst and Annie Kenney are going to take the suffragette movement 'another step towards voting'. Once again, the Pankhursts are planning another Millitant campaign to demonstrate to the government that women deserve the right to vote. Many MPs disagree with their 'Deeds, not words' campaigns as it endangers the public and their chance of getting the vote. One of the MPs we interviewed said 'Women are just proving to us they aren't worthy of the vote by planning these violent campaigns'. Members of the public are advised to stay away from the suffragettes' campaigns.

Later on this month, one of our reporters interviowed Millicent Fawcett. She told him that her and most of the suffragists believed there was another way of getting the vote without being violent. She said that she did not 'want anything to do with violence and the suffragettes'. You can read about the interveiw with Millicent Fawcett on page 17. Most 'Votes for Women' supporters are suffragists as they want to get their opinion across without causing harm to others by campaigning, signing and creating petitions and explaining to government committies and MPs why they are worthy of the vote.
